Why Mastercard is bringing crypto onto its network

FEBRUARY 10, 2021 | BY RAJ DHAMODHARAN

Whatever your opinions on cryptocurrencies – from a dyed-in-wool fanatic to utter skeptic – the fact remains that these digital assets are becoming a more important part of the payments world.

We are seeing this fact play out on the Mastercard network, with people using cards to buy crypto assets, especially during Bitcoin's recent surge in value. We are also seeing users increasingly take advantage of crypto cards to access these assets and convert them to traditional currencies for spending.

The card-payments firm is also "actively engaging" with central banks around the world to possibly launch new digital currencies.

REUTERS/Soe Zeya Tun

- Mastercard said it will offer support for customers to transact in some select cryptocurrencies this year.
- The card-payments firm is "actively engaging" with major central banks to launch digital currencies.
- All crypto coins won't be supported on its network because many still lack compliance measures.
